Santa Clara Valley Open Space Authority (OSA) Update

The OSA conserves the natural environment, supports agriculture, and connects people to nature, by protecting open spaces, natural areas, and working farms and ranches for future generations. In recent years, the OSA has assisted with protection of open space in the Santa Teresa foothills.

This year through a partnership with Peninsula Open Space Trust and the City of San Jose, OSA has protected 937 acres of open space in North Coyote Valley. The area on the map identified in orange depicts this newly protected North Coyote Valley Conservation Area. This land is a key link in connecting wildlife habitats as well as providing opportunities to restore natural floodplains and improve water quality.

To learn more about the Authority, visit their website at http:// www.openspaceauthority.org . We also plan to have OSA representatives speak at a future STFNA meeting.

The STFNA website has a new look!

We've recently updated the STFNA website <http://www.stfna.org/> . The new site is easier to navigate and will support a number of new features which will be activated over the next few weeks. The cost to operate the new site is also much less expensive than our old service.
